2006-2007

This year's yearbook staff decided to design the yearbook around the theme of the 1960's. We chose this theme because of the many parallels between life then and life now. We thought that the idea of a "new age of activists" represented the ideas of the Lick student body. The spirit of the young 60's generation reflects the initiative and self-confidence seen in our current day students. Many of our modern conflicts and events are similar to those of this influential decade. Some of these include ideas of peace, war, environmentalism and global awareness. Although there are many things that relate us to the past, the decisions we make today will ultimately affect our future. We hope the yearbook gives you an idea of the relationship we have with the past. Enjoy!

Headmaster's Address

Dear Class of 2007,

Given that the theme of this yearbook is the 1960's, and that I was your age at that time, I do see the connection between the '60's and your tenure at Lick in a vivid and personal way. While the '60's is today portrayed, and often caricatured, in a variety of ways, I experienced that period primarily as one of hopeful idealism. This was especially true for those of us who were yearning for, and working toward, change. Whether called by the Civil Rights Movement, the Women's Movement, the Anti-Vietnam War Movement, the "Cultural Revolution," or some combination of the above, we were animated by a vision of a more equitable, life-affirming and peaceful future.

Similarly, I want you to know that it is you, as representatives of your generation, who make me feel so hopeful today. You are smart; you are caring; you are insightful, and you are creative. You have also demonstrated, especially through the Reshaping High School process, that you have the capacity to navigate change with intelligence, discernment, resilience, grace and good will.

I have no doubt that you are going to be willing and able to play your part in making the world a more equitable, life-affirming and peaceful place. As you prepare to launch your next chapter, I thank you for all you have done these past four years to help make Lick the kind of human community that we would hope to see replicated, over and over again, throughout the larger world.

I wish you well in putting your imprint on this world of ours, which sorely needs your positive and healing touch.

Al Adams
Headmaster

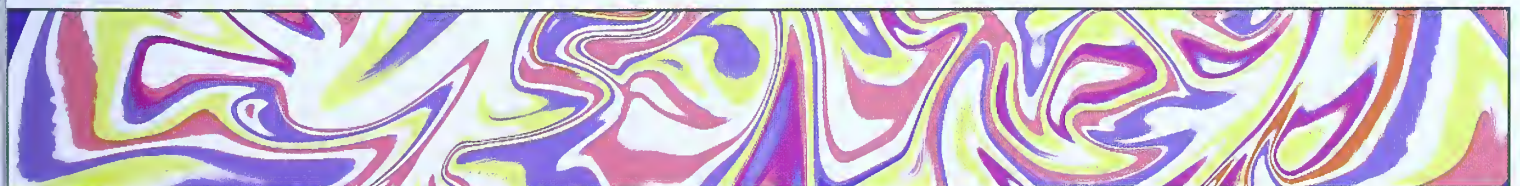

Teacher Dedication: Ms. Palau

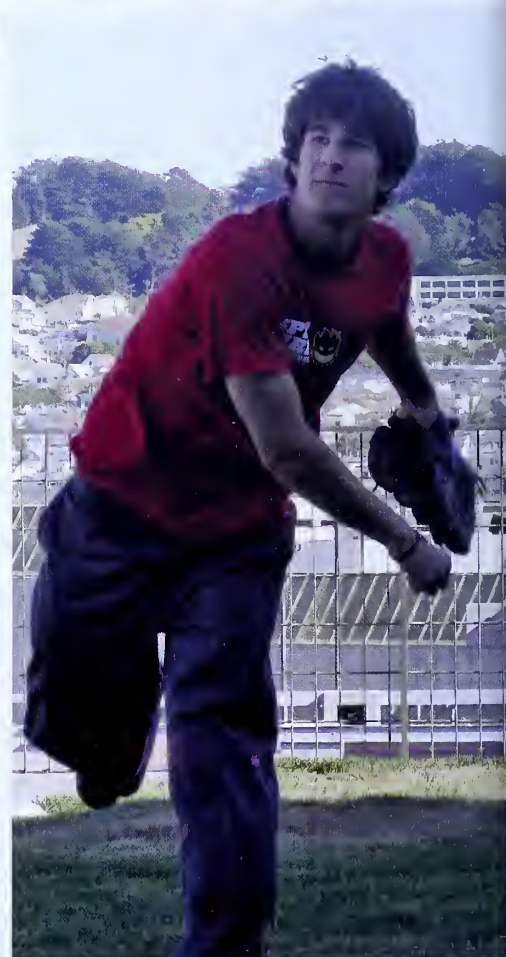

A wild farmer, a loving mother, and an English teacher at Lick-Wilmerding: WHO IS MS. PALAU? After four years, Ms. Palau has taught each class currently at Lick, and has friends in every class. She walks down the halls with a smile: in one hand, her folder full of freshman essays, in the other, a picture of her bunny to show whomever she runs into. In just four years, she leaves such a big impression in all of our hearts.

Ms. Palau has been such an inspiration to her students. She has opened herself in ways that allow students to not only look at her as a teacher, but also as a friend. She has taught intellectually stimulating English classes for the past four years, each year growing along with her students. Even though she may be tough, she is always willing to give extra help. She is never too busy for her student.

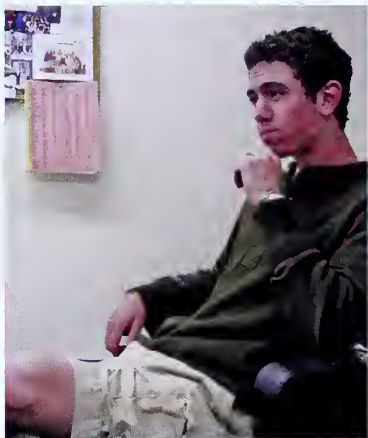

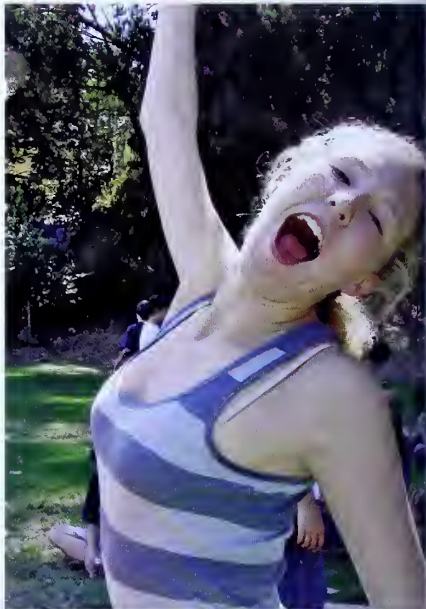

Not only is she willing to help with schoolwork, but her door is always open to students with other issues. Whether it is that you just got in a fight with your best friend or your parents are being extra hard on you at home. Ms. Palau is always willing to listen and help.

Ms. Palau immensely cares for the community outside the classroom. She can often be found lining up with the students at the beginning of the lunch period, talking about her sons, her farm, and the rest of her life, while being equally interested in the lives around her. She approaches students in the halls whom she does not know, focused on the community at Lick. Thank you Ms. Palau for our high school experience both inside and outside the class. You will be missed.

Words from Kim Chew, classmate and close friend

When reflecting back on the life Momo led, I am pleased to see that she was immersed in genuine happiness. She surrounded herself by those she loved, threw herself into activities she enjoyed, and was one of the few people I know who saw and took advantage of the opportunities she was given. We would often have heart-to-hearts in the middle of the night when one or both of us could not sleep. Momo had such a compassionate and empathetic way towards others that made me feel so comfortable and secure when with her. Moreover, she taught me how to be happy again, and how to focus on the positives. I believe that Momo had very insightful, unique, and mature values. She really focused on enjoying herself and her life to the fullest extent.

Momo Nakamura

Class of 2006

Reflections by Justin Chan, Cross Country and Track teammate and friend

Momo died in an auto accident in the Sierra Nevada Mountains on July 28, 2006. She was eighteen.

Although Momo is gone, her legacy lives on in all of the people she knew and touched. As long as we continue to live with the vivacity and kindness of Momo, we will honor her memory. However, mourning over her death is the last thing Momo would want. Though her passing serves as a chilling reminder that life isn't fair, we must celebrate Momo's life instead of focusing on her tragedy.

Although Momo lived only eighteen years, she is one of only a few eighteen-year-olds who lived a full life. Cherish the opportunities at Lick and in life. Next time that freshman is sitting alone beside her locker, say hello. Don't wait until tomorrow's photo class to tell that special someone how you feel. Live richly, as Momo did, because life is too short to waste.

The act of running allowed Momo the space to express herself.

“Momo moment”: She was wearing her track uniform shorts—the ones she was supposed to have turned in at the end of the track season. I said to one of my fellow coaches, “That takes confidence when she knows her coach is here.” I considered saying to Momo, “Welcome to the camp and don’t forget to turn in your uniform before I leave tomorrow.” Rather than being annoyed, however, I was taken by how proud she was to be a part of that Lick team, impressed that she wanted to wear her team shorts to the first gathering of the runners from schools all over Northern California.

Thoughts of Robin Von Breton, teacher and friend

Momo observed enthusiastically, “I love to stop and chat off campus. We are different when we meet along the way.” Momo, the freshman, was ebullient and serious. Her sophomore year, she joined the newspaper—to practice writing. And she crafted her skill, word by word. Momo taught me, reminded me—to be patient—to be impatient. Momo taught grace. Humor. Balance. Energy. Challenge. She explored and she empowered.

I never forgot her cross-country coach and friend Jeff Gardiner’s words, “In running, something intangible passes between teammates. I do not know what it is, but I have experienced it. It is, I believe, something spiritual. The breath shared between runners creates a deep spiritual bond. Momo gave to her teammates, and what she gave them came from her heart. In turn, we pass along what she gave us...from heart to heart to heart.”

Heart to heart to heart. Momo’s lessons: speak the truth. Honor the deepest finest part of yourself. Defeat the bad. Defeat despair with joy. Create beauty of this moment and for the future.

"When you wake up in the morning, Pooh," said Piglet at last, "what's the first thing you say to yourself?" • "What's for breakfast?" said Pooh. "What do you say, Piglet?" • "I say, I wonder what's going to happen exciting today?" said Piglet. • Pooh nodded thoughtfully. • "It's the same thing," he said – Benjamin Hoff, The Tao of Pooh + Life is divided into three periods—that which has been, that which is, that which will be • Of these the present time is short, the future is doubtful, the past is certain • For the last is the one over which Fortune has lost control, is the one which cannot be brought back under any man's power • But men who are engrossed lose this; for they have no time to look back upon the past, and even if they should have, it is not pleasant to recall something they must view with regret • The present offers only one day at a time, and each by minutes; but all the days of past time will appear when you bid them, they will suffer you to behold them and keep them at your will – Seneca + All the good music has already been written by people with wigs and stuff – Frank Zappa + The voice of disappointment: "I listened for an echo and heard nothing but praise—" – Nietzsche + [22:15] Tw33k3l2: You're life makes me sad + Be careful, you philosophers and friends of knowledge—protect yourself from martyrdom! From suffering "for the sake of the truth"! Even from defending yourselves! That corrupts all the innocence and refined neutrality in your consciences • It makes you stubborn against objections and red rags; it dulls your minds, brutalizes you, and puts you in a daze when you have to play out your role as the defenders of truth on earth in the struggle with danger, malice, suspicion, expulsion, and even dirtier consequences of your hostility, as though "the truth" were such a harmless and clumsy person as to require defenders! – Nietzsche + I bought a doughnut, and they gave me a receipt • There is no need for that, man. I'll just give you the money, you give me the doughnut • End of transaction • We do not need to bring ink and paper into this • I cannot imagine a situation in which I would have to prove that I bought a doughnut • Some skeptical friend: "Hey man! Don't even act like I didn't buy that doughnut! I got the documentation right here...damn...I forgot it at home... it's in the filing cabinet...under D...for doughnut." – Mitch Hedberg + To say 'I love you' one must know first how to say the 'I.' – Ayn Rand, The Fountainhead + Weld your garage door shut at night to prevent car theft • In the morning, drive through the garage door at full speed, immediately dispatching any burglars attempting to break in from the other side. – Jay Pinkerton, Tips on Crime Prevention + To sing a wrong note is insignificant, but to sing without passion is unforgivable. – Beethoven + All animals are equal — but some animals are more equal than others – Animal Farm by George Orwell + Scholars of the highest class, when they hear about the Tao, take it and practice it earnestly • Scholars of the middle class, when they hear of it, take it half earnestly • Scholars of the lowest class, when they hear of it, laugh at it • Without the laughter, there would be no Tao – Lao Tze + As men's habits of mind differ, so that some more readily embrace one form of faith, some another, for what moves one to pray may move another to scoff, I conclude... that everyone should be free to choose for himself the foundations of his creed, and that faith should be judged only by its fruits. – Spinoza

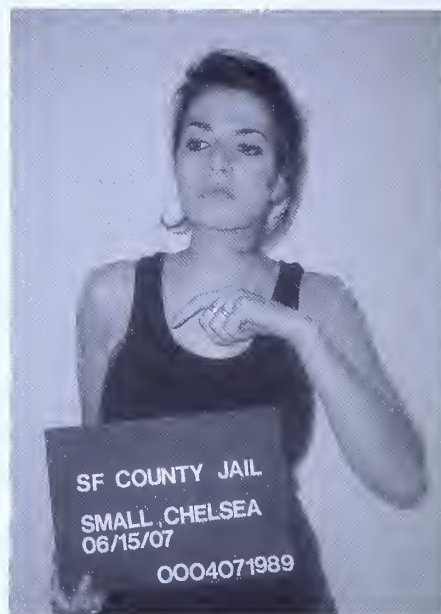

We shall not cease from exploring • And at the end of our exploration • We will return to where we started •
 And know the place for the first time - T.S. Eliot + All Spaniards, we discovered, knew two English expressions
 One was "OK, baby", the other was a word used by the Barcelona whores in their dealings with English sailors, and I am afraid the composers would not print it – Orwell + Let the beauty of what you love be what you do – Jalaludin Rumi + Charlie Brown: I'm at the end of my rope, Lucy. Everybody else is dead besides you and me • I thought being stuck as a prepubescent bald kid for 50 years couldn't get any worse – Robot Chicken + When authorities warn you of the sinfulness of sex, there is an important lesson to be learned • Do not have sex with the authorities - Matt Groening + Wherever there's injustice, oppression, and suffering, America will show up six months late and bomb the country next to where it's happening - PJ O'Rourke + As long as men worship the Caesars and Napoleons, the Caesars and Napoleons will duly rise and make them miserable - Aldous Huxley + Simplicity is the final achievement • After one has played a vast quantity of notes and more notes, it is simplicity that emerges as the crowning reward of art - Chopin + All human actions have one or more of these seven causes: chance, nature, compulsion, habit, reason, passion, and desire - Aristotle + I don't think you can understand history if you don't use your body in a historical way – Mr Nelson + I have to say, I think that we are in some kind of final examination as to whether human beings now, with this capability to acquire information and to communicate, whether we're really qualified to take on the responsibility we're designed to be entrusted with • And this is not a matter of an examination of the types of governments, nothing to do with politics, nothing to do with economic systems • It has to do with the individual • Does the individual have the courage to really go along with the truth? – Buckminster Fuller + No house should ever be on a hill or on anything • It should be of the hill. Belonging to it • Hill and house should live together each the happier for the other – Frank Lloyd Wright + In order to arrive at what you do not know • You must go by a way which is the way of ignorance • In order to possess what you do not possess • You must go by the way of dispossession • In order to arrive at what you are not • You must go through the way in which you are not – T.S. Eliot + The truth was a burning green crack through my brain • Weapon statistics hanging in the air, glimpsed out of the corner of my eye • Endless repetition of the act of shooting, time slowing down to show off my moves • The paranoid feel of someone controlling my every step • I was in a computer game • Funny as Hell, it was the most horrible thing I could think of – Max Payne + Most people who bother with the matter at all would admit that the English language is in a bad way, but it is generally assumed that we cannot by conscious action do anything about it • Our civilization is decadent and our language -- so the argument runs
 -- must inevitably share in the general collapse • It follows that any struggle against the abuse of language is a sentimental archaism, like preferring candles to electric light or hansom cabs to aeroplanes • Underneath this lies the half-conscious belief that language is a natural growth and not an instrument which we shape for our own purposes – George Orwell + A man rang caller's bell and she let him in through garden; she didn't know who he was and she was scared. Man was PG&E workman reading meter.

"Yes."

And then silence.

Given the nature of the hotel, I'd expected the menu to feature items like brown Windsor soup and roast beef and Yorkshire pudding, but of course things have moved on in the hotel trade. The menu now was richly endowed with ten-guinea words that you wouldn't have seen on an English menu ten years ago—"noisettes," "tartare," "duxelle," "coulis," "timbale"—and written in a curious inflated language with eccentric capitalizations. I had, and I quote, "Fanned Galia Melon and Cumbrian Air Dried Ham served with a Mixed Leaf Salad," followed by "Fillet Steak served with a crushed Black Peppercorn Sauce flamed in Brandy and finished with Cream," which together were nearly as pleasurable to read as to eat.

I was greatly taken with this new way of talking and derived considerable pleasure from speaking it to the waiter. I asked him for a luster of water freshly drawn from the house tap and presented au nature in a cylinder of glass, and when he came around with the bread rolls I entreated him to present me a tonged rondelle of blanched wheat, oven baked and masked in a poppy-seed coating. I was just getting warmed up to this and about to ask for a fanned lap coverlet, freshly laundered and scented with a delicate hint of Lemon Daz, to replace the one that had slipped from my lap and now lay recumbent on the horizontal walking surface subjacent to my feet, when he handed me a card that said "Sweets Menu" and I realized that we were back in the no-nonsense world of English.

It's a funny thing about English diners. They'll let you dazzle them with piddly duxelles of this and fussy little noisettes of that, but don't mess with their puddings, which is my thinking exactly. All the dessert entries were for gooeey dishes with good English names. I had sticky toffee pudding and it was splendid. As I finished, the waiter invited me to withdraw to the lounge where a caisson of fresh-roasted coffee, complemented by the chef's own selection of crêpes, awaited. I dressed the tabletop with a small circlet of herbes crafted at the Royal Mint and, suppressing a small gastrointestinal air, effected my egress.

I had strayed from the coast path, my first order of business the next morning was to find my way back to it. I left Corfe and crept heavily up a ferociously steep hill to the nearby village of Kingston. It was another glorious day and the views from Kingston over Corfe and its castle—suddenly distant and miniature—were memorable.

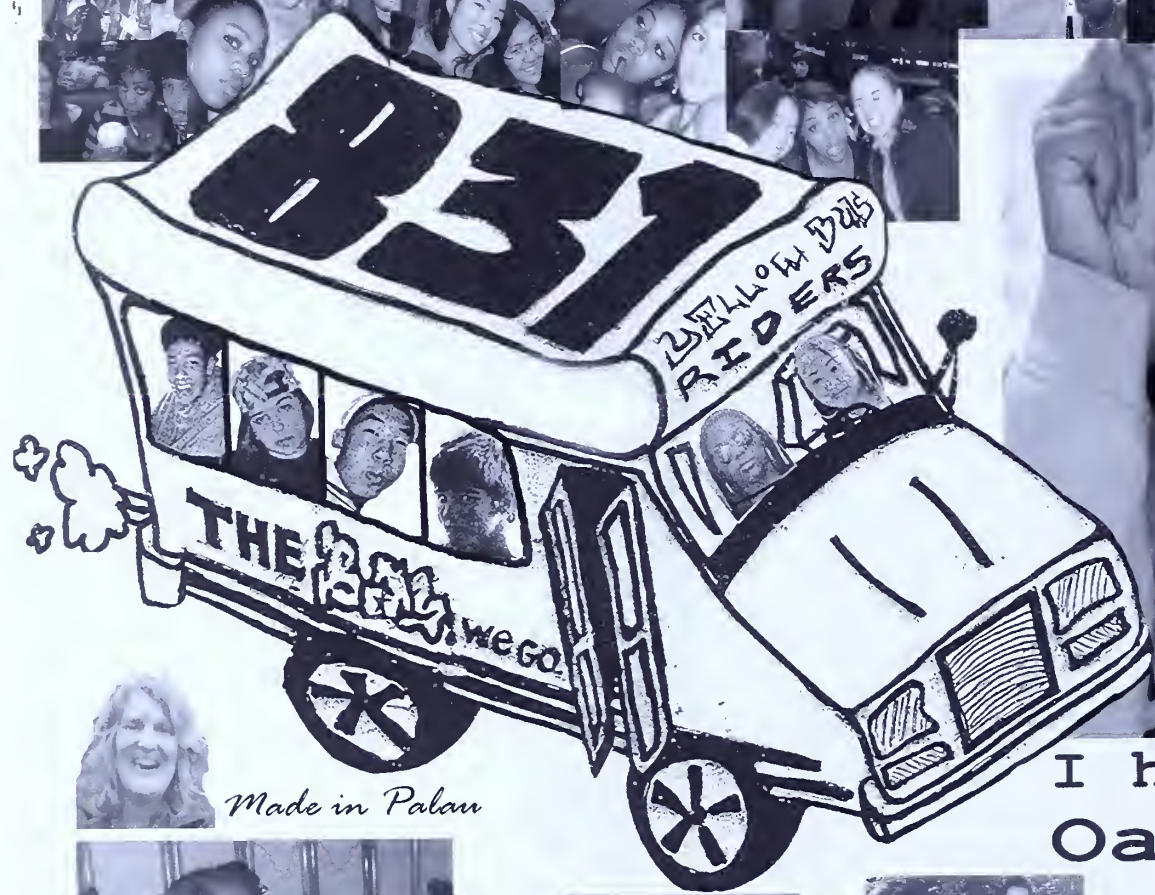

I picked up a mercifully level footpath and followed it for two hours through woods and fields along the crest of a secluded hanging gully to the coast path at a lonely and dramatic eminence called Whale-tout Cliff. The view once again was stunning: whale-bone cliffs and radiant white cliffs, dotted with small coves and hidden away from the sea. I could see all the way to the west, my destination for the day, some ten miles and a daunting whalebacks to the west.

I followed the path up steep hills and down. It was only ten in the morning, but already it was unseasonably warm. Most of the Dorset coast hills are no more than a few hundred feet high, but I was soon sweating and I was soon sweating, puffed out, and I took off my pack and discovered with a groan that I had bought a new water bottle, bought in Poole and diligently filled that morning, back at the hotel. There's nothing like having nothing to drink to bring on a towering thirst. I plodded on, hoping against hope that there would be a pub or café in Kimmeridge, but as I walked from a high path above its lovely bay I could see that it was all to be likely to offer anything.

Looking out my binoculars I surveyed the village from afar and discovered that there was a Portakabin of some type by the beachside parking lot. A little tearoom on wheels, perhaps. I hastened along the path, past a sadly neglected stone tower—one of many Society, as we have constituted it, will have no place for me, has none to offer; but Nature, whose sweet rains fall on unjust and just alike, will have clefts in the rocks where I may hide, and secret valleys in whose silence I may weep undisturbed. She will hang the night with stars so that I may walk abroad in the darkness without stumbling, and send the wind over my footprints so that none may track me to my hurt: she will cleanse me in great waters, and with bitter herbs make me whole.

Dear God, give us a flood of water
Let it run tomorrow and always Give us plenty of little shags

No matter how hopeless, no matter how far,
To fight for the right without question how far

That my heart will lie peaceful and calm
When I’m laid to my rest.”*

Well, now time passed and NOW it seems Everybody's having them dreams.

Everybody sees themselves walkin' around with no one else.

Half of the people can be part right all of the time, and some of the people can be all right part of the time, but all of the people can't be all right all of the time.

I think Abraham Lincoln said that.

I said that.

Once upon a time, in a small village deep in the center of Malaysia, two young chaps by the names of Pepe and Aurelio dwelled. Popping their shaggy heads out of their respective windows, they spontaneously had an urge to go on an adventure, and like all adventures it involved a random object on the floor.

Looking for this random object on the floor, Pepe and Aurelio begin to frantically search for their night vision goggles. Suddenly, in the midst of the darkness a giant snow rabbit bounds upon Pepe's head. "Let's pretend we don't exist. Let's pretend we're in Antarctica," wishes Aurelio. All of a sudden, they find themselves surrounded by millions of snow particles. Then they decide to embark upon a real adventure.

I would like to thank the people who have been there for me since day one; those who have been there with me through thick and thin. You guys have given me the strength and motivation to keep on going. These last four years especially, have been a struggle for me and I have all of you to thank for helping me get through them. I am very fortunate to have such wonderful people in my life. I thank God every night for blessing me with such a loving family and supportive friends and teachers. I definitely would not be the person that I am today without all of you. Each one of you is an important part of me and together help create me as a whole. I love you guys so much. Thanks for everything.

THESE ARE THE MAKINGS...

...OF ME

Dear Lord Jesus,

I first would like to thank You for all the blessings You have given me. Thank You for such a loving family, supportive friends and teachers, and for the beauty of life. Thank You for each day, each breath, and each second. Father, without my faith I would be lost. When I did not believe in myself, You were there to give me courage. When I had my head down low to the ground, You were there to lift it back up high pointing to the sky. When tears came rolling down my cheeks, You were there to wipe them off dry. God, I thank You for guiding me and leading me to the right path. As I end my journey of high school and begin college, I know that You will remain by my side. Please continue to watch over me as I enter a new chapter in my life. God is good. Amen.

Thanks for helping me survive
... i love you guys!

When I think of Kappy, I think of his afro and about what could be hiding in it. Who was to know that it hid an incredible businessman. I always just knew him as a fun dude, with good taste in music, great culinary skills and who always knew where the party was. He would always show up fashionably late to get-togethers and such and everyone would always be so glad to see him. I know one day he'll be a ridiculously successful man, and hopefully we'll work together again sometime.

We are very proud of you,
not simply for what you have accomplished, but for who you are
and the man you are becoming.

Here's to the next chapter in your journey —
the best is yet to come...

We love you,

Nick, Dad, Mom and Ding
